TEACHER'S SOCIETY RIGHTS. Tennessee School Trustees Tried to

Limit Them and Failed. A despatch from Nashville, Tenn., says Because Miss Frances Copass, a telepted and popular young instructor at the Hallinstitute, at Martin, went into society too much to suit the venerable charged as a teacher, though she had a contract for a year's work. No cause for failed to comply with the demands made of her. Public sentiment was aroused, and the people of the town demanded that she assert her rights on the contract.

"She brought suit for salary. At the rial the evidence developed the fact that her qualifications as a teacher were first class, and that her work in the school room gave universal satisfaction. The detence claimed by the trustees was that they had a right to regulate when and how often she should attend social func-tions, and that they had demanded of her that she should not go into 'society' more than three times a week. Miss Copass proved conclusively that she had never had callers more than once or twice a

The young woman won the suit, and it is now up to the trustees to reinstate Miss Copass or pay her for a year's work as provided under the contract."
